

Gifts through a will

Making AGC a beneficiary or a partial beneficiary of an estate is easy and clear. A simple codicil, or addendum, is all a donor needs. The AGC Foundation can provide wording and instructions for making such a change. A donor can add the AGC Foundation to a will in several ways:

- a. Leave AGC an outright gift of money in your will
- b. Leave AGC a percentage of your estate
- c. Make AGC the residual beneficiary of your estate
- d. Leave AGC a specific asset in your estate (a piece of real estate, interest in a business, stock account, a savings account, a bond fund, etc.)

Example: As John would like to leave a legacy to AGC, he adds a codicil to his will providing that 10% of his estate, after the specific bequests he makes to family and friends, goes to the Foundation. John knows that he has provided a long-term benefit to a cause important to him.
